

People I Don't Really Know But Definitely Have Opinions About

(Dark humor)

@Cloudy24

Entry 01: The Guy Who Self-Diagnosed with 'Alpha Energy'

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but he once said he "radiates alpha energy"— and ever since, I've watched him cross the street like he's dodging imaginary paparazzi.*

*He talks in motivational quotes.
Like, exclusively.
You say, "Hey," and he hits you with:*

"I don't do small talk, I build empires."

*Sir, you work at a mall kiosk that sells fake AirPods.
Your empire is currently 2% off and comes with a free sticker.*

*He once told me eye contact is the most dangerous weapon.
But here's the thing—he wears sunglasses indoors.
At night.*

So either he's hiding his third eye, or he's deeply afraid someone will see through the layers of unhealed mantras.

*Honestly?
I respect the delusion.
But I also think his mirror owes him an apology.*

Entry 02: The Girl Who Thinks She's Mysterious (But She's Just Avoiding Responsibility)

*There's this girl I don't really know, but she's got the energy of someone who journals once every six months
and calls it "shadow work."*

She doesn't talk much—not because she's deep, but because she hasn't finished a single train of thought since 2021.

*Wears all black.
Says it's a statement.
It is. The statement is: I ghost people professionally.*

*She once said, "I'm not like other girls, I'm chaos in heels."
But I've seen her trip up a flight of stairs while whispering Lana Del Rey lyrics.
The only chaos is her Google Calendar.*

*She's the type who disappears for weeks and comes back with a new moon phase tattoo and zero explanation.
Her vibe says: "If you don't understand me, you were never meant to."
No babe, we just asked where you were.*

*And I'm not judging (I am).
But if mysterious means you owe five people an apology and a borrowed charger—
then yeah, she's basically a myth.*

Entry 03: The Guy Who Listens to Podcasts and Suddenly Thinks He's Smarter Than You

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but lately, every time I talk to him, he mentions a podcast he's listened to.*

"You know, on this one podcast, they talked about how productivity is a social construct."

Okay, cool. But I didn't ask for your TED talk, bro.

*He's like a walking, talking podcast now—
And I'm just out here, trying to finish my coffee while he drops knowledge from The Joe Rogan Experience.*

*Look, I get it. Podcasts are great. I listen to a few myself.
But he's on another level.
Suddenly, he's an expert in everything—psychology, philosophy,
even astrophysics.*

*He explained quantum mechanics to me the other day.
The catch? He didn't understand it. He just quoted a guy who said, "Well, it's like... electrons... you know, they act like waves or particles or whatever."
Right, thanks for that insight.*

At some point, I stopped listening to his "deep" thoughts, but he still insists on talking about self-awareness like it's the one thing that'll save humanity.

He says, "We're all just one thought away from enlightenment."

And I'm just over here thinking:

No, we're one podcast away from him getting a degree in 'Awareness'—a major that doesn't exist outside of his brain.

Entry 04: The Girl Who's Always Rebranding

*There's this girl I don't really know,
but she's the type to "reinvent" herself every two weeks.
You know the type. One minute, she's posting about her "self-care journey", and the next minute, she's got a whole new bio that says
"I'm finding my higher self."*

*One day, she's obsessed with crystals—
The next day, she's "spiritually evolved" because she's started doing yoga in her living room.*

*She once called me up and said,
"Hey, I'm rebranding my life. I'm going to be a wellness coach now, but with a twist—because I'm also an artist."
I was like, "What twist?"
She said, "I'm going to sell self-love workshops but with music in the background."
Yes. You read that correctly. Music.*

*It's hard to keep track of her, honestly.
You can tell when she's rebranding by the sudden glow-up in her Instagram feed. She'll post a new motivational quote and tag it #newbeginnings, and for about three days, it'll be her only personality trait.*

*I respect the hustle though.
I think.
But girl... it's been four rebrands in the past month, and I'm still waiting for the "final version."*

Entry 05: The One Who Speaks in Star Signs

*There's this person I don't really know, but I swear every conversation with them starts with "So,
like... I'm a Sagittarius."
You think I'm joking? I'm not. They've said that to me at least seven times.*

*And don't get me started on the time they blamed their bad mood on Mercury being in retrograde.
"Sorry, I snapped. It's just... Mercury's in Gatorade, you know?"
Honey, no one knows what that means.*

*She once tried to convince me that I wasn't 'vibing' right because I wasn't aware of my moon sign.
"You're a Taurus, right? That's why you're so grounded, but also kinda stubborn."*

*I swear I'm not stubborn. I just prefer to exist without all these... cosmic excuses.
But hey, if the stars are the reason she keeps ghosting people,
then maybe she's onto something.*

I respect the commitment to astrology, but when every problem in your life starts with "It's my planets," I just think—maybe, just maybe, it's not the stars... it's your habits.

Entry 06: The Architecture Student Who Explains Buildings Like They're Her Exes

There's this architecture student I don't really know, but every time she talks about a building, it feels like she's breaking up with it.

"Oh, this one? Ugh, I used to like it, but it's just so cold. No warmth. Just concrete and attitude."
No. Seriously. She said that. About a building.

And then, when she talks about the "greats"—Le Corbusier, Frank Lloyd Wright—it's like "You don't understand the complexity of their genius. It's like they were ahead of their time."

Yeah, no, we get it. You've watched too many architectural documentaries on YouTube. We've all been there.

But her passion? Honestly, it's kind of beautiful. She gets so excited about design details, like the way light filters through a window or the texture of stone walls, and suddenly, she's not just talking about buildings. She's talking about love.

Like, she'll explain how one brutalist building was her "first real crush."

"Yeah, it was harsh, but I admired the boldness."

I just want to know, did she ever love any of them enough to actually build something herself?

Entry 07: The Guy Who Won't Stop Talking About 'The Grind'

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but he talks about the grind like it's some kind of sacred ritual.*

*"I don't sleep, I don't stop, I just grind, grind, grind."
Okay, cool, bro. But you're also drinking three energy drinks before noon and napping in your car after work.*

*He says things like, "The hustle never stops."
And I'm like, cool, but your "hustle" is working part-time at a smoothie bar and reselling vintage clothes on eBay. No disrespect, but there's only so many times I can hear about the "grind" before I lose my will to live.*

*I watched him once, pacing around a coffee shop, wearing a T-shirt that said "Rise and Grind."
And I'm sitting there, sipping my latte, wondering if he's ever thought about resting instead of... whatever this is.*

*You want to know what he does when he's not grinding?
He brags about the 10-minute meditation app he downloaded.
"It clears my head before I conquer the world," he says.
Buddy. Take a nap.*

Entry 08: The Girl Who Thinks Her Spotify Playlists Are a Personality

*There's this girl I don't really know,
but she's always posting about her curated Spotify playlists.
It's not just music. Oh no. It's an experience.*

*She's got one for every "vibe":
"Running Away from My Problems",
"Sad Girl Autumn",
"My Heart Is Healing, I Promise".*

*And when I ask her about her music, she'll say things like,
"Well, this track just captures the melancholy I'm feeling right now."*

*What do you mean by "captures," though?
She can't explain it. It's just a vibe.*

I get it, music is personal. But when your entire identity is reduced to your playlists, it makes me wonder if the person behind the sad indie tracks even exists beyond the headphones.

Entry 09: The Student Who Gets Defensive About Their GPA But You Never Asked

There's this student I don't really know, but somehow, every conversation turns into an impromptu dissertation on their GPA.

*"I mean, I could've gotten a 4.0 if I had just cared more."
I didn't even ask about your GPA, but thank you for the unsolicited input.*

I just said "Hey," and now I know about your grading history, your professor complaints, and how "the system is rigged against you."

I'm still trying to figure out why you're so proud of a 3.2, but I digress.

Look, we all struggle with grades. But when every conversation turns into a GPA lecture—something tells me it's not the school that's the problem, it's you.

Entry 10: The Guy Who Always Has a Business Idea but Never a Job

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but every time he talks to me, it's about the next big thing he's working on.*

*"Hey, I've got an idea. We're gonna sell organic toothpaste in glass bottles and call it 'Earthshine'."
...and that's it. That's the entire plan.*

*He gets real into these ideas—too deep, too fast.
First, it was a "mobile app for sustainable grocery shopping."
Then, he wanted to open a restaurant with only zero-waste recipes,
but his only cooking experience was ramen.*

*At some point, I just stopped asking what he's doing with his life,
because every conversation is the same: "I'm just waiting for the right investor."
Buddy, you don't have a business. You have dreams.*

And at the rate you're going, you might just need a reality check before you can afford that first investment.

Entry 11: The Fitness Influencer Who Counts Every Calorie Except Her Attitude

*There's this girl I don't really know,
but every time I see her,
she's talking about how "one bad meal won't ruin your progress"
while holding a kale smoothie that looks more like pond water.*

*She's a fitness influencer—you know the type.
She wakes up at 5 AM for a "sunrise workout"
and posts about it with hashtags like #RiseAndGrind and #SquadGoals,
but when I asked her once about her real routine, she said, "Oh, I just don't eat carbs for a week and drink only lemon water."*

Girl, that's not a diet. That's a cry for help.

*She'll count every calorie she consumes, but I'm starting to think she's ignoring the calories in her attitude, because if I hear "no excuses" one more time,
I might start making excuses just to get some peace.*

Entry 12: The 'Entrepreneur' Who Talks More About His "Side Hustles" Than Actually Doing Them

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but he talks about being an "entrepreneur" like it's a personality trait.*

"I'm all about multiple streams of income, you know? Side hustle, passive income, the grind. You gotta hustle to make it in life."

Okay, cool. But the only hustle I've ever seen him do is selling expired protein bars at the gym.

The funny part?

Every time he mentions his latest "business venture," it's something completely different.

*One month he's dropshipping phone cases,
the next he's selling essential oils, then it's flipping real estate—despite the fact he still rents a one-bedroom apartment.*

He never actually does any of these things.

He just tells people about them.

I'm still waiting for him to explain what his "passive income" looks like,

because last I checked, he was asking for a loan to start his next "big thing."

Entry 13: The Vegan Who Talks Like Their Diet is a Religion

*There's this girl I don't really know,
but every time we talk about food,
it's like she's about to preach a sermon.*

*"I'm not saying you should go vegan, but you should. It's the only ethical choice."*

*Look, I respect her choices, but after hearing her passionately explain the moral implications of consuming dairy,
I feel like I'm in a TED Talk about the evils of cheese.*

*I don't even think she's seen a cheeseburger in years,
but she can quote every article that mentions the exploitation of cows.*

Once, she said, "You can't be woke if you eat meat."

*Like, girl, I just want to know if you have any non-vegan snacks at your house for when guests come over?*

At this point, I feel like I need a sermon on the benefits of kale just to survive the next dinner party.

Entry 14: The Aspiring Artist Who Has No Idea What They're Doing But Claims They're "Being Creative"

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but every time I ask him about his art,
he talks about it like it's the next Mona Lisa.*

*"I'm experimenting with abstract minimalism," he says, showing me a canvas with a single blue dot in the middle.
That's it. Just a dot.*

*Okay, I get it. Art is subjective. But, when I ask him about his process,
he goes off on a rant about how it's all about "finding himself through brushstrokes" and "expressing emotion through colors."
That's cool. But at what point does "abstract minimalism" become an excuse for lazy painting?*

Honestly, I'm just waiting for him to figure out what "being creative" means.

Right now, I think it means staring at a canvas for hours and convincing himself that it's deep.

Entry 15: The Guy Who Claims to Have "The Best Taste in Music" But Only Listens to 2010 Indie Bands

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but every time music comes up, he starts with,
"I'm a big music guy. You probably haven't heard of these bands."*

*And then he lists bands I've never heard of.
Not because they're obscure or underground,
but because they broke up 10 years ago.
And he still listens to them on vinyl—which is fine, but it's 2025, my dude.*

*He'll say things like,
"I only listen to music with depth."
And by depth, he means a 2007 indie band with a two-album discography and lyrics that are more confusing than the plot of Inception.*

Buddy, it's not "taste," it's just nostalgia.

Entry 16: The Guy Who Talks About “Manifesting” Like He’s About to Summon a Genie

*There’s this guy I don’t really know,
but every conversation with him turns into a lecture on manifestation.*

*“You just have to put it out into the universe, and the universe will bring it to you.”
It sounds simple, right?
Except he’s been “manifesting” a yacht for the past year.*

He has a vision board, a crystal, and a podcast about manifesting your dreams, but somehow, he’s still living in a one-bedroom apartment and has yet to meet anyone who wants to manifest him a job.

*I tried asking him what his process looks like, and he said,
“I journal every morning and think about what I deserve.”
Well, if you deserve that yacht,
I’ll be over here working on my business plan.*

Entry 17: The 'Traveler' Who Only Posts Pictures from Airport Lounges

*There's this girl I don't really know,
but every time I see her Instagram,
she's posting selfies from different airport lounges.*

*"I'm just living my best life, exploring new destinations."
But here's the thing—
I've never seen her leave the airport terminal.*

*She'll post a picture of her latte,
and say, "So grateful for the privilege of traveling."
Meanwhile, I'm sitting here, thinking the most adventurous thing you've done is buying overpriced airport snacks.*

*Let's be real, girl.
If you spent as much time in the destination as you do in the lounge,
you'd actually see some of the world.*

Entry 18: The Guy Who Talks About His “Crypto Portfolio” Like He’s a Wall Street Pro

*There’s this guy I don’t really know,
but somehow, every conversation revolves around his crypto portfolio.*

He tells me about his investments with the kind of confidence reserved for financial advisors with 30 years of experience.

But let’s be honest:

You don’t know the difference between Ethereum and a coupon code.

He’s all about “HODLing” and talks about “Doge” like it’s the next big thing in finance.

Look, I get it, you’ve read a few articles.

But when you try to sell me on the idea that Dogecoin is the future of currency,

I just want to know if you’re actually making money, or if your portfolio is just one bad decision away from crashing.

Entry 19: The Guy Who Still Thinks ‘Hustling’ Is the Key to Success—At 35

*There’s this guy I don’t really know,
but he still talks about “hustling” like he’s in his 20s.*

*“I’m putting in ~~the~~ work I’m hustling 24/7.”
Okay, buddy, but you’re 35 and still working at the same job you had 10 years ago,
while everyone else has actually moved up in their careers.*

He talks about his side project like it’s about to go viral, but the only thing going viral is his late-night Instagram stories about “entrepreneurship.”

*Maybe it’s time to swap the hustle for a bit of strategy.
Just a thought.*

Entry 20: The “Self-Help Guru” Who Has Never Helped Anyone But Himself

*There's this guy I don't really know,
but every time I see him,
he's posting motivational quotes on social media.*

*“You can't pour from an empty cup.”
“Believe in yourself, and the world will follow.”
Cool, man, but have you actually helped anyone,
or are you just recycling advice from Pinterest?*

*He's been “coaching” people on finding their purpose for years
now,
but every time someone asks for real advice,
he just tells them to “read a book and change your mindset.”*

I'm not sure if he's inspiring anyone, or just trying to convince himself that he has a purpose.
